

Edward McClelland spent the better part of the Nineteen Eighties studying and working in Computer Science and worked in Software development as a programmer until Nineteen Ninety Four, when he decided to switch gears and go into the support area of Information Technology.

After several years working for a few large corporations in 2005 he decided to offer IT services to small businesses and residential computer users. We find that clients are very happy for the fast response and expert knowledgeable service offered at a good price.